Here's a reason to love film festivals. How else would we see something so fabulously un-Hollywood and so deeply culturally specific? Members of their Inuit community deposit Ninioq (Madeline Piujuq Ivalu) and her grandson Maniq (Paul-Dylan Ivalu) on a remote island so the two can dry the village's fish catch. But things go terribly wrong back home and no one comes to pick them up.

Mesmerizingly beautiful, with heartbreaking performances by the principals, this third film in the trilogy from Igloolik Isuma Productions that also includes The Fast Runner and The Journals Of Knud Rasmussen has maybe 10 pages of dialogue, but it flies by.
